Packers Seek Consistency

By Art Daley
Green Bay Packer Yearbook Editor

The Packers were excellent, good, bad and pretty bad at times during the 1980 season.

They did all sorts of unbelievable things—like beating the Bears 12-6 in overtime on a missed field goal in Game 1, permitting the same Bears 61 points in Game 14, beating the Division Champion Vikings twice, losing heartbreakers to powerhouses Cleveland and Pittsburgh, etc.

The Packers produced yards at a record pace... but, alas, they just couldn't turn them into enough points. They scored under 20 points in 10 of the 16 games.

Defensively, the Packers allowed under 20 points in only five games, including the commendable totals of 6, 9 and 3 against the Bears, Bengals and Vikings.

It all added up to a record of 5 wins, 10 losses and 1 tie. Three of the wins came in Green Bay, one in Milwaukee and one in Minnesota. The tie was played in Tampa Bay.

The past season got off to a most devastating start when both starting quarterbacks, Lynn Dickey and David Whitehurst, were kayoed for the pre-season in the Hall of Fame opener in Canton, Ohio. Then the defense took its losses—Rich Wingo, Mike Hunt and later John Anderson via injury.

The offense was set back and didn't recover until the fifth league game. And the defense, which was introducing the 3-4 for the first time, suffered a few growing pains—not to mention loss of three linebackers.

The obvious problem in 1980 was inconsistency—in scoring, defensive play and, seemingly at times, in enthusiasm.

Coach Bart Starr feels "we've got to be more consistent. That's going to be our byword in 1981—consistency."

And now comes the 1981 season—Green Bay's 62nd in the NFL.

How can the Packers reverse the record to, say, 10-5-1.

Let's look at the offense. No. 1 goal: More points.

The offensive line will get special attention. If Mark Koncar makes a complete recovery from an achilles heel surgery, the line will get exceptional help on the left side. To make things interesting, there are three good prospects from last year, Karl Swanke, Syd Kitson and Buddy Aydelette, who will push veterans Greg Koch, Leotis Harris and Derrel Gofourth.

The line, middled by talented and hard-working Larry McCarren, is the key to the offense.

Starr is hopeful that the Packers can boost their rushing yardage from 3.4 in 1980 to just over 4.0. Eddie Lee Coach Bart Starr claps and yells encouragement from sideline.

Ivery and Gerry Ellis, who had so many bright moments last year, are the key figures. If they can run effectively, Lynn Dickey's passing will be considerably more valuable.

Dickey broke seven Packer passing records last year, an amazing feat when you consider the rushing game was not a big threat. James Lofton is the receiving key, of course, but he badly needs somebody to help remove some of the double teaming he generally receives.

The Packers drafted a big and fast tight end in Gary Lewis. He also is swift enough to play wide receiver. Lewis along with Paul Coffman could give the Packers a new two-tight end offense to help take some of the pressure off Lofton. Sophomore Fred Nixon also figures to blossom into a premier wide receiver.

Dickey had his best season in pro football in 1980, escaping any of the injuries that plagued him in previous league seasons. And he's looking forward to an even better 1981. The QB spot is getting special scrutiny this year due to the presence of Rich Campbell, the California star who was the Pack's No. 1 draft choice.

The 1980 offense scored 231 points, an average of 14.4, and produced 5,097 yards, an average of 318 yards per game. But to show the inconsistency, the offense averaged 228 yards per game in the first four contests, 391 the next eight games and 262 the last four.

There was a spell in mid-season when the Packers' offense led the entire league in yardage production.

Defensively, the Packers are bound to improve considerably because they will know the intracacies of the 3-4 defense better than they did a year ago. The 3-4 became the basic defense but Defense Coordinator John Meyer introduced a whole batch of new looks to go with it. These should be second nature in '81.

The heart of the defense unit is linebacker and this is where the Packers hope to improve the most with the return of Wingo, Anderson and George Cumby to go with the hard-hitting and active Mike Douglass. To provide more competition, an additional eight linebackers will compete, including three draft choices and holdovers Ed O'Neil, Kurt Allerman, Jim Gueno and Paul Rudzinski.

The defensive line is pretty well intact with Ezra Johnson and Mike Butler at the ends and Charley Johnson at nose tackle, but they'll be pressed hard by such holdovers as Casey Merrill, Terry Jones, and Troy Thomas and draftees Rich Turner, a good nose tackle from Oklahoma, and Byron Braggs of Alabama.

That touchdown feeling. James Lofton enjoys as Paul Coffman prepares to spike ball after scoring TD vs. Tampa Bay in Milwaukee.

The defensive backfield may undergo some changes, with Mark Lee and Mike Jolly possibly seeing more action. Johnnie Gray is an important fixture who may be switched from free safety to strong safety. Gray made five of the team's 13 interceptions last year while non-starters Jolly and Wylie Turner each snared two.

Steve Luke, Estus Hood and Mike McCoy will return to fight for starting status, along with Mark Murphy and draftee Bill Whitaker.

The new rule allowing more freedom for passers and receivers started to take hold in 1980 and most teams started to revamp their defensive backfields. The Packers likely will look at more combinations this year.

The Packers' special teams play could be improved considerably, with experts in their field manning the punting and place kicking jobs.

The Pack drafted a punter on the third round, one Ray Stachowicz of Michigan State. Stachowicz averaged 43.3 yards during his college career in all sorts of weather—the kind he will encounter in Green Bay.

The Packers are looking at four kickers headed by the talented Jan Stenerud, who came to the Pack's rescue late in 1980. Jan, the former Kansas City star, is starting his 15th year. He'll be challenged by Don Sweet, onetime star in Canada, Skip Vernon and Rade Savich.

And there you are . . . a briefing on the 1981 Packers. Let's all hope for a lot of consistency and a lack of injuries.

Money and the Packers

By Art Daley
Green Bay Packer Yearbook Editor

These two pages have a greenish tinge.

The reason is that the article contained therein is about money . . . Packer football money.

People don't pay money to see the Packers toss money around. They pay to see them toss the football around.

Thus, if they play football well people become more excited about the Packers and thus become more anxious to see them play football.

Those few paragraphs sound like a first grade reader but they are so constructed for the purpose of introducing the off-beat subject known as money.

Money has been an important part of the Packers since the word go—the price of the franchise ($250), haggling with players over salaries (like $40 or $50 a game), formation of the Packer corporation to form a sound financial base, the sale of non-profit stock to keep the club alive, the first TV income. It could go on and on.

Money is a mild springtime subject in Packerville because that's when (1) the Packers hold their annual stockholders' meeting and (2) the signing of new draft choices starts.

The stockholder session is most unique because it's the only one of its kind held in the National Football League.

You see, these stockholders don't make any money.

The Packers have 1,757 stockholders and they own 4,624½ shares of non-profit stock. The bulk of the stockholders are those folks who bought $25 shares of stock in the Packers in the winter of 1949-50.

More than $150,000 was raised, the club was saved and seven years later (1957) the City of Green Bay built the Packers a new stadium seating over 32,000. The Packers, themselves, built the additions to the stadium and now the park seats over 56,000.

The 1981 stockholders' meeting was held in downtown Green Bay on Monday night, May 4 with an attendance of more than 100 stockholders' plus 39 of the club's 45 directors.

The meeting lasted about 65 minutes and it was peaceful despite the club's losing record. President Dominic Olejniczak ran the meeting and the main features were the corporation's annual financial report and some comments by Coach Bart Starr on the team.

A profit of $1,298,010 was announced on 1980 operations in a profit and loss statement presented to each stockholder. This is the third highest gain in the club's history. They had $1.8 million profit in 1979 and $1.5 in 1978.

The Packers' financial figures give you an idea what other owners are pocketing out of their operations, although these figures would vary by virtue of stadium size and reaching the playoffs.

The Packers were one of the higher paying clubs in the 1960s because the players were producing championships. Despite the lack of success on the field in the 1970s, Green Bay has still maintained a good, solid reputation for paying well (and still keeping a reasonable salary structure) despite the jump of Bruce Clark to Canada in 1980. This could have been an agent-prompted flight and already Clark is unhappy in Canada. Clark is only the third first choice the Pack lost to Canada in 45 years of drafting. Not the worst record of paying first picks.

The profit figures for 1980 sounded rosy, of course, but there was a word of warning at the 1981 meeting.

The income from actual football operations in 1980 was $739,482. The 1979 football income was $1,981,107. Thus, 1980's income was $1,241,625 down from the previous year. The big jump came in player salaries (season expense), training camp and playing one extra pre-season game (Canton Hall of Fame).

The bulk of the income for 1980 came from interest on investments from their surplus. This interest, largely in solid investments such as treasury bills and municipals, totaled $1,257,054.

Green Bay has a most unique structure. The Packers' original charter made them a non-profit corporation. Thus, they are able to accumulate dollars and their surplus as of the end of 1980 was listed at $18,320,123. Of that amount, approximately $14 million can be invested. The remainder is in fixed assets.

Other clubs in the NFL can't pile up dollars in this way and the income at the end of the year, in some cases, supports several families. In other cases, the franchise might be a branch of a larger business, a partnership or a company.

The non-profit charter under which the corporation still operates was set up in the early 1920s by a group of businessmen headed by Andrew Turnbull, the club's first president. They provided that if the corporation folded the proceeds would go to the local American Legion post.

The founders also provided in the corporation's by-laws that no stockholder shall ever receive a return on his investment either through dividends or distribution of assets.

This is the real secret to why the Packers are the only team in the NFL operating on its original franchise. It is a practical impossibility for the Packer franchise ever to be sold or transferred.

Franchises in the NFL are irrevocable; that is, the league cannot force their sale or termination even if all other members should desire to do so.

So the only way the Packer franchise could ever be sold or terminated would be by the voluntary action of two-thirds of its stockholders.

Can you imagine two-thirds of the Pack's rabid shareholding hometown fans ever voting to give up their franchise?

The Packers' success, like most other clubs in the NFL, rests quite a bit on the shoulders of the athletes on the field. If they win, the problems diminish and often become inconsequential. If the team loses, the problems increase and the natives become restless.

The club has restructured its organization to the extent that Bart Starr has been relieved of his general manager's duties so that he can devote fulltime to football operations. Olejniczak, elected to a 24th consecutive term as president, also becomes chief executive officer. He will work directly with Starr and Corporate Assistants Tom Miller and Bob Harlan.

And there you are ... Money and the Green Bay Packers!

P.S. if you hold a stock certificate from that 1950 stock sale each $25 share now would be worth $3,961.64 ... IF you could cash it in.

You Have To Get Better Every Year

— Gerry Ellis

Gerry Ellis evades 49er after block by Eddie Lee Ivery in Packer victory in Milwaukee.

By Bob McGinn
Green Bay Press-Gazette

By most standards, the Packer locker room is a commodious, comfortable place for players to call home.

The individual lockers, identified by green and gold name cards above each stall, are well spaced. It may not compare with an easy chair in front of a fireplace, but for a locker room, it gets the job done.

There is a trouble spot, though, in one corner where a door leads to the practice field. It is much-traveled. In fact, it can be a downright bottleneck minutes after workouts.

It is there, with the absolute worst locker location in the room, that Gerry Ellis found a home in the National Football League.

Ellis, a victim of the Los Angeles Rams' final cut a week earlier, got an SOS call from the Packers and signed as a free agent Sept. 10.

Four days later he played against the Detroit Lions. Eleven days later he was the starting fullback against none other than the Rams. About two months later he earned the right to be called the Packers' fullback of the future.

It was heady wine for Ellis, a confident young man who always felt he was better than a lot of other people did. Heading the list of doubters was Rams' coach Ray Malavasi. Heading the list of semi-doubters was Warren Powers, Ellis' coach at the University of Missouri.

Then Ellis' path crossed with Bart Starr, a coach in dire need of hungry football players.

"I got up here and Bart asked me if I wanted to play," said Ellis. "I told him, 'Yeah, I want to play.' He's the one who gave me a chance to play, and it's been pretty good ever since."

Indeed. Ellis was a tough, swashbuckling, second-effort kind of runner. He had a low center of gravity and was tough to knock down. His pass-catching ability was impressive. He had sure hands and he made the difficult catches.

Of the Packers' top draft choices in 1980, Bruce Clark wound up in Canada, George Cumby twice underwent knee surgery and Mark Lee failed to crack the starting lineup.

So, when it came time to select the team's rookie of the year, it was a foregone conclusion that the award would go to Ellis. It did, but it should not be inferred that it was undeserved.

In fact, Ellis' rushing total of 545 yards was the second best by a first-year Packer in the 62-year history of the franchise. Only John Brockington, who amassed a then NFL-rookie record 1,105 yards in 1971, gained more.

He also caught 48 passes for another 496 yards and scored eight touchdowns, making him the team scoring leader. His 10.3 average per catch was surpassed only by Billy Sims of the Detroit Lions and Bruce Harper of the New York Jets among leading NFL running backs.

Zeke Bratkowski, the Packers' backfield coach, thinks Ellis had an outstanding season. "But the key to Gerry Ellis is the potential for his entire career," said Bratkowski. "Having been put into the situation he was with no training camp, and adapting to our system, and being so productive. I think his career is all ahead of him."

Ellis fervently hopes that is the case.

"I proved that I can play to a lot of people," he said. "I proved that I want to play. Whenever the time comes, I'll always be ready to play.

"(But) you can't go on what happened last year," said Ellis. "You have to look ahead. I felt pretty good just being in the NFL.

"Now, every year, you just have to get better. There's good people coming out every year. You just have to do well to stay here."

Like every self-respecting back, Ellis wants to carry the ball. The more the better, he says.

Steve Atkins and Ellis split time at fullback for the first half of the season, before Atkins suffered a season-ending ankle injury against Pittsburgh in the ninth game.

In his first eight games, Ellis gained a modest 208 yards for a 3.9 average in 6½ carries per game.

With Atkins out, Ellis went on a tear. He went 17-for-83 against San Francisco, 11-for-69 against the New York Giants and 15-for-101 against Minnesota. He averaged 14 carries, gained 253 yards, picked up nearly six yards an attempt and scored four touchdowns.

Things were different after that. In the last four games, all defeats, Ellis rushed 30 times for 84 yards, a meager 2.8 average.

Ellis insists he did not do anything differently late in the year. "I went out there every week and did the same thing," he said.

Bratkowski put the blame on the team's failures down the stretch.

"The last four games was like a total team thing," he said. "Sometimes the game contributes to statistics, because it gets off rhythm and you have to depend on the pass more so."

Eddie Lee Ivery, shown here escaping from the Vikings' Jim White, had one of the lowest fumble ratios in the NFL in 1980, losing the ball only three times in 202 carries and 50 pass receptions. He led the Packers in rushing with 831 yards, averaging 4.1 yards, and added 481 yards on pass catches.

Ellis, he stressed, did not reach a plateau in his development.

Bratkowski left little doubt as to who will be the starting fullback in 1981. "He (Ellis) is going to line up right behind center. Atkins is going to be right behind him," he said.

Forgive Ellis if he has to pinch himself at such reports. Just last summer his professional football career seemed at an end before it ever had a beginning.

The Rams used three of their first eight draft picks in 1980 to select running backs. Jewerl Thomas of San Jose State went on the third round, Mike Guman of Penn State went on the sixth round, and Ellis went on the seventh round.

Two roster berths opened when starting halfback Wendell Tyler suffered a serious hip injury before training camp and veteran Jim Jodat was traded to Seattle during the exhibition season. The other veterans were Cullen Bryant, Elvis Peacock and Eddie Hill. Ellis liked the West Coast—"I mean I didn't see a drop of rain and you'd just be amazed at all the pretty girls"—and he liked his chances of making the roster.

"I didn't make many mistakes at all, and I could play both positions," he said, his temper still stirred to a degree by the Rams' decision to waive him. "(But) I think they were going with experience, and then in order of the draft. If you were drafted higher, then naturally you were going to stay."

Thomas was "legitimate," in Ellis' opinion, but he questioned why the Rams kept Guman and the oft-injured Peacock.

"I just knew that a couple of backs were going to get hurt, like Eddie Hill and Elvis (they did)," he said. "Elvis, he hadn't played a full season. Eddie Hill, (he) wasn't very big and I just knew I had him beat.

"They had this drill set up with a dummy set up behind us, and the linebacker had to come get the dummy. Well, I don't think one linebacker got by me. I think I fared better than the rest of the backs. Then (Bob) Brudzinski comes in, he runs right over Guman, I mean just run right over him.

"I just hoped they'd cut one of those guys and bring in somebody fresh."

Ellis was right. Neither Peacock nor Hill survived the season.

The end for Ellis came on final cutdown day, at about the same time four veteran Ram holdouts returned to the team. But Ellis sensed The Turk would be paying him a call before that after he fumbled one day in practice.

"Ray Malavasi, he gets all fired up and hyper about me," said Ellis. "Two or three plays later Jewerl Thomas gets up and he fumbles three times in a row and Ray didn't say a word. I just felt then, 'Oh well, I guess I'm the next to go.'"

After being waived, Ellis was contacted by San Diego, Oakland, New Orleans and Green Bay. He picked the Chargers and worked out with the team, but they decided not to proffer a contract. Oakland was next in line, but the Packers called and their situation seemed more urgent.

The Packer staff worked him out and it appeared encouraging, but Ellis found it difficult to conceal his pessimism.

"I said, 'Well, you get cut once, you get cut twice, and nobody really knows what you can do.'" he recalled of his feelings. "They don't know if you're competent enough, able to play or can comprehend what's going on out there."

Terdell Middleton

After the brief workout, Bratkowski was quoted as telling Starr, "We can't let an athlete of his quality get out of town."

The Packers didn't, and it proved to be a wise decision.

Bratkowski believes Ellis has something resembling a sixth sense on a football field.

"He's a very instinctive football player. That's one of his keys," says Bratkowski. "He makes the adjustment immediately. He bounces off tacklers and runs back to daylight."

A case in point, says Bratkowski, was the Pittsburgh game, when Ellis made a shoestring catch on a broken pass play and turned it into a 69-yard touchdown.

"He reacted to the situation, Lynn (Dickey) saw him, he caught the ball down around his shoestrings and he picked it up and ran for a touchdown," said Bratkowski. "This is the instinctive athletic ability, that's what it is."

Ellis agrees. He is a natural. He has that rare blend of speed, strength, agility and athletic sense.

At Hickman High School in Columbia, Mo., where he grew up, the 5-feet-11½, 220-pound Ellis threw the discus a state-record 188-feet-3 and the shot put over 60-feet, and he ran the 100-yard dash in 10.0. He was also an all-state football player and a starter on the basketball team.

Ellis accomplished those things despite the fact that he underwent back surgery for a slipped disk as a high school freshman. The operation was a success and today seldom gives him trouble, although he admits that fears of a possible second disk injury are with him in certain blocking situations.

From Hickman, Ellis attended Fort Scott (Kan.) Junior College for a year, then went back home as a sophomore to the University of Missouri. His career there was a good one but he was overshadowed by both James Wilder and Earl Gant as a junior and by Wilder as a senior. Ellis chafed to a degree, particularly early in his final season.

Wilder, a second-round draft choice of Tampa Bay in 1981, ended the 1978 season with an 181-yard, four-touchdown burst in an upset of Nebraska. It signaled a campaign by Tiger publicists to bring him national recognition.

Ellis, coming off a strong season of his own as the principal backup behind Wilder and Gant, another NFL draftee, remembers being somewhat miffed.

Then during summer drills Wilder pulled a hamstring muscle and missed virtually all of the first three games, leaving Ellis as the featured back for the only time in his college career. He made the most of it, including a 173-yard, two-touchdown performance in a 14-6 victory over Illinois.

Bob Bratkowski, son of the Packer assistant and then a part-time coach at Missouri, remembers the situation well.

"Wilder was the guy who got the pub—he was considered the running back," said Bratkowski, now full-time wide receiver coach at Weber State. "The latter part of Ellis' junior year

Wilder was phenomenal, and they built him up.

"Well, Gary's senior year Wilder was hurt the first three games and Ellis absolutely carried us, catching it and running. He was very responsible for us winning our first three games."

In the first three games Ellis rushed 47 times for 270 yards, a 5.7 average. With Wilder's return, Ellis went 74-for-314 the rest of the way, a 4.2 average.

After one pro season, Ellis says bluntly that he has no physical limitations that would stop him from becoming a Pro Bowl player. All he worries about is getting a chance to showcase his talent.

"It will take more than six carries, five carries, 10 carries," he said, glancing at a game-by-game breakdown of his rookie year. "A lot of guys, they're averaging 20 some carries a game.

"(But) I'm not really looking for fame. I like to go out here and do what I do best. That's play ball.

"I guess if you do good recognition will come, the stardom will come if you're doing good enough. It's just goals you set for yourself.

"In high school, I said before I'd leave I'd hit 60-feet in the shot put and break the state discus record. Those things did happen.

"Now if I say that one of these years I'm going to have 1,000 yards, one of these years I will have one."

As a means to such an end, Zeke Bratkowski wants Ellis to fumble less and block better.

Last season, Ellis fumbled seven times, in 126 carries, giving him one of the highest fumbles per carry ratios in the NFL. Most of them, according to Bratkowski, came when Ellis was running to the right. It is his natural style to carry the ball in his left arm and hand, and when he went right pursuing defenders used the ball as an inviting target for their shoulders and helmets.

"We've got to get him to change the ball when he gets to the point of contact," said Bratkowski.

His blocking should improve, says Bratkowski, with slightly better effort and experience.

The Packers' other starting running back, Eddie Lee Ivery, had one of the NFL's lowest fumble ratios. He lost the football just three times in 202 carries and 50 pass receptions.

But Ivery did more than merely hang onto the ball. After undergoing severe knee surgery after his first game in 1979, he made it through the entire '80 season and should now be better because of it.

"You're going to see a better Eddie Lee Ivery than you saw last year," said Bratkowski.

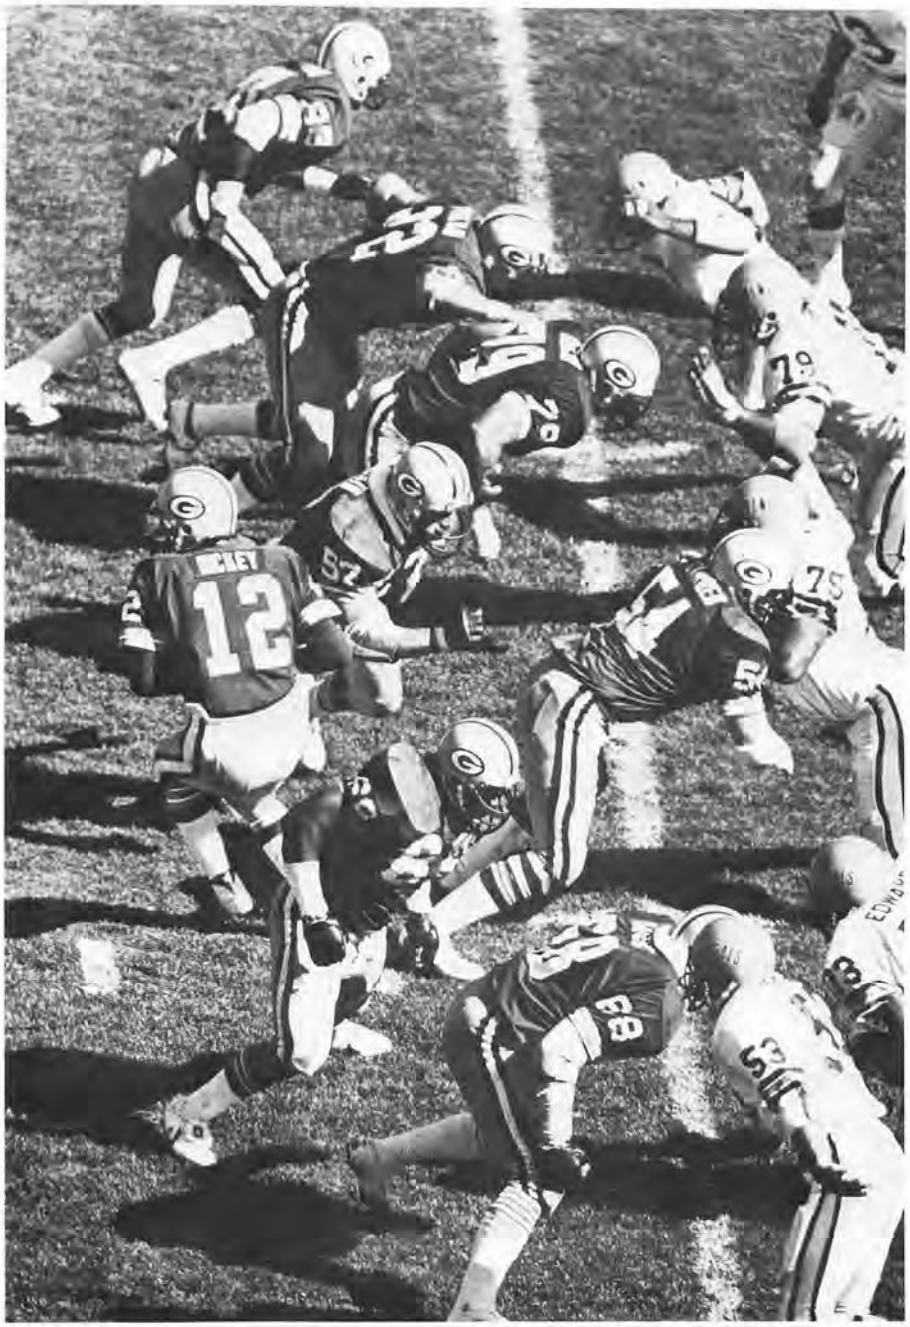
While Ivery appeared to lose some of his first-step speed and shiftiness in the open field, Bratkowski believes he is a more effective player now than ever.

The other key backs heading into training camp figure to be Atkins, the third-year fullback who has not finished a season, and halfback Terdell Middleton. Harlan Huckleby, Eric Torkelson and Vickey Ray Anderson are also veteran holdovers seeking roster spots.

Ellis has something else on his mind.

To put it simply, he wants out—of the corner.

"It was nice just being in that part of the locker room (last year)," he chuckled. "But I'll try to get out of there this year. They can give that spot to somebody else who hasn't been here before."



The offensive line is the running backs' best friend. Here, Lynn Dickey gets set to hand off behind (from top) John Thompson (83), Paul Coffman (82), Mark Koncar (79), Derrel Gofourth (57), Larry McCarren (54), Leotis Harris (69) and Greg Koch (68) against Bengals in Green Bay.

The Packers new punter, Ray Stachowicz, operates The Jugs, a machine that snaps ball back for punts, during mini-camp in May.

When Dan Devine drafted Chester Marcol out of Hillsdale College in the second round of the 1972 draft, he did it for one reason.

He didn't want any more surprises.

Devine wanted just one place-kicker (instead of the three he used during his first season in Green Bay) and he wanted one who would be around for a long time.

It worked, of course. In fact, Marcol stayed in Green Bay twice as long as Devine and, prior to his sudden departure last season, climbed to the top of the scoring list among kickers in Packer history.

When Bart Starr claimed free agent punter David Beverly midway through the 1975 season, he did it for one reason.

Starr didn't want any more surprises.

It was in his first game as head coach in which Starr was forced to watch the Detroit Lions block two Steve Broussard punts.

Starr wanted a punter he could count on to get the ball away in time, and one who could give the Packers several years of consistent performance.

Starr's move paid off. Beverly went on to average 39.9 yards in 1977 and 40.4 yards in 1979 and kept the Packers near the top of the league in punt coverage year after year.

But when the artistry of Marcol and the consistency of Beverly began to fade in recent years, those long-lost surprises started to creep back into the Packer repertoire.

Some of the surprises found Starr as their victim. Some were produced by Starr himself.

Surprise No. 1—It occurred during the 1979 training camp when Beverly, coming off a poor 1978 season, was being challenged by rookie punter Rick Partridge. Partridge appeared to have the edge but when the final cuts were made, Beverly was still on the Packer roster and Partridge was on his way to New Orleans and eventually San Diego.

Surprise No. 2—Marcol fell victim to a leg injury midway through the 1979 season and, after missing a field goal and extra points against the New York Jets at Lambeau Field, underwent surgery and missed the rest of the season. Starr picked up Tom Birney who had failed to make the Packer roster earlier that season.

Surprise No. 3—Birney became the Packers' Cinderella story of 1979. Expected to just be a mere fill-in for the injured Marcol, Birney made seven of nine field goal attempts in the 1979 season, including four straight against the Lions in the final game of the season.

Surprise No. 4—Marcol recovered from his injury and beat Birney out for the placekicking job at the start of the 1980 season.

Surprise No. 5—It was the first game of the 1980 regular season and the Packers were trying to recover from a dismal exhibition season that ended with a 38-0 loss to the Denver Broncos. Marcol lined up to attempt what would be a game-winning field goal in the sudden death overtime against the Chicago Bears. Alan Page broke through to block the kick with his chest but the ball bounced back into Marcol's arms. Marcol ran around left end for the touchdown to win the game, 12-6.

Surprise No. 6—Just over four weeks later, Marcol was cut by Starr. Marcol had made two of his three field goal attempts and all seven extra point attempts. But his poor kickoffs were giving Packer opponents excellent field positions and Starr chose to make a change.

Surprise No. 7—Rather than pick up another kicker from the free agent pool, Starr went back to Birney who was teaching school in Michigan.

Surprise No. 8—Birney missed two relatively easy field goal attempts, one at the end of the fourth quarter and one at the end of the overtime period, and the Packers had to settle for a 14-14 tie against Tampa Bay.

Surprise No. 9—Seven weeks later, Starr cut Birney. The decision came after Birney missed two extra points and a crucial 30-yard field goal in a 25-13 victory over the Minnesota Vikings.

Surprise No. 10—Starr was able to convince veteran placekicker Jan Stenerud to sign a Packer contract for the remainder of the 1980 season. Stenerud had been cut by the Kansas City Chiefs earlier in the season.

When the 1980 season and all those surprises finally ended, the Packers' kicking game, while not secure, seemed to be clear.

Stenerud walked away from the final game at Detroit saying he very likely would not play again. Marcol had been claimed by the Houston Oilers but was later released and was in the throes of some personal problems. Birney would not be back. The placekicking job was wide open.

The punting job did not seem to be a chief concern. Beverly averaged 38.2 yards in 1980, had 18 kicks inside the 20-yard line and didn't seem to be in danger of losing his job.

Then the final two surprises came along. In February, Stenerud telephoned Starr and told him he planned to report to training camp and asked to be given a fair chance to make the team. Starr gladly assured him of that chance.

In late April, the Packers surprised many people by picking Michigan State punter Ray Stachowicz in the third round of the draft.

Beverly asked for, and was given, his release from the Packers.

Suddenly, the roles had changed. The placekicking game, expected to start from scratch in 1981, was in the capable hands, or feet, of a man regarded by some as the best NFL kicker of the 1970s. The punting game, while being entrusted to a kicker who gained nationwide prominence as a collegian, was starting anew.

Dick Rehbein, the former DePere High School standout who has graduated to special teams coach for the Packers, is not surprised by the most recent changes.

"I'm pleased that Jan is returning," said Rehbein, who felt Stenerud was forced to kick under very difficult circumstances in the Packers' final four games of 1980. "He still has good range and he's been there. He knows what it's like."

Stenerud, now 37-years-old, took a couple months to consider his future before phoning Starr with his decision and the reasons for it.

"I told Bart after that last game that I would, in all likelihood, not come back," Stenerud said. "But I told him I'd call him way before the draft to give him my final decision.

"I came back for a number of reasons. First, while I haven't been around this team that long, from what I've seen I feel it has the potential to have a very good season. There are some holes to fill but with so many people getting healthy again, the team looks good and I feel it can win a lot of games.

"Second, my wife and I like Green Bay. The people have been very nice to us and we like the people on the team. Third, I still enjoy the competition. There are a lot of good kickers around today but I feel I can still do the job and this is my 15th camp."

Rehbein said the Packers didn't go into the draft determined to find a replacement for Beverly.

"But we saw in this guy (Stachowicz) a chance to get a player who showed such outstanding potential as a collegian," Rehbein said. "It's difficult to make comparisons, and I wouldn't try to compare Stachowicz with someone like Ray Guy, but he has the capabilities of being a great punter for us."

Rehbein said the Packers were particularly pleased with Stachowicz' ability to kick under both adverse and pressurized kicking conditions.

"He has shown an ability to kick in this climate," Rehbein said, "which is important because you have to know how to kick into a wind and in cold weather. And he's had to punt with his heels near the end line in front of 100,000 people so he knows what pressure is like."

Stachowicz showed sharp improvement during his college career that saw him earn all-Big Ten honors four straight years.

As a freshman, he averaged just 38.8 yards a punt. He increased his average to 43.1 as a sophomore and finished up with 44.3 and 46.2 averages.

Several things accounted for his improvement.

"Between my freshman and sophomore years, they changed footballs in college and that helped," said Stachowicz. "I also adjusted to the wind at East Lansing. I had kicked in a valley in Ohio where it was cold, but there was no wind.

"Also, I got into stretching exercises a lot and developed my legs physically."

This could be Stenerud's last season although he hedges by saying "I hate to go out on a limb and say it's absolutely my last."

This could be the start of a long career for Stachowicz who Rehbein says "could very well play here for 10 or 11 years."

But surprises do happen.

That tied look. Jan Stenerud, then a Chief, and Chester Marcol shake after 10-10 tie in Milwaukee in 1973.

The Kick Story

Fifty-one different players have kicked at least one point after touchdown or one field goal in the 62-year history of the Packers.

Of that number, only 13 were kicking specialists. The first specialist employed by the Pack was Ben Agajanian, then in his 40's, who was called in to replace Paul Hornung, who was in and out of the Army, in 1961.

Only two kickers followed him in the 1960s, Don Chandler and Mike Mercer. The "K" specialists were numerous in the 1970s but the most productive was Chester Marcol, who leads the Pack with 515 kicking points.

Other specialists were Dale Livingston, Tom Birney, Joe Danelo, Lou Michaels, Tim Webster, Booth Lusteg, Jan Stenerud, Dave Conway and Errol Mann. The all-time kicking figures follow:

Davis, Ringo Enter Canton

WILLE DAVIS, blessed with the three attributes—speed agility and size—that Vince Lombardi considered most important for a successful football lineman.

JIM RINGO, the only all-pro Vince Lombardi found when he took over the Packers in 1959.

Davis and Ringo, two stalwarts of the Packers' fabulous 1960s, were enshrined in the Pro Football Hall of Fame in Canton, Ohio on Aug. 1.

Their entrance in the HOF brings to 15 the number of former Packer stars who now are members of Pro Football's Greatest Class.

Eight of the 15 are from the Lombardi era, including Lombardi, himself, who was elected in 1971—a year after he died. The others are Jim Taylor, Bart Starr, Forrest Gregg, Ray Nitschke, Herb Adderley and Davis and Ringo.

Preceding them in Canton were Cal Hubbard, Don Hutson and Curly Lambeau of the charter class of 1963; Mike Michalske and Clarke Hinkle in 1964; Arnie Herber in 1966; and Tony Canadeo in 1974. Walt Kiesling and Emlen Tunnell, who closed out their careers as Packers, also were named to the HOF.

Besides speed, agility and size, Davis, a dynamic 6-3, 245-pound player, also had the intangible assets—dedication, intelligence, leadership—that enabled him to climb a cut above almost everyone else. In his 10 seasons as a Packer, Willie became widely recognized as a superior defensive end, one of the very best ever to play in the NFL.

The Grambling graduate was an all-NFL selection five times in a six-year span, starting in 1962. He played in six NFL championship games and the first two Super Bowls. He was a Pro Bowl choice five years in a row. He played 12 seasons, the first two with Cleveland in 1958-59, and didn't miss even one of the 162 games in that period.

"He is a wonderful example of dedication, concentration and application and what it can do for an individual," Phil Bengtson, who replaced Lombardi as the Green Bay coach in 1968, said. "He is a fine example for our younger players and an excellent team leader. He has developed himself into one of the truly outstanding players in this league."

Off the field, Willie was also in the limelight as a gregarious, affable, cooperative individual. A solid citizen in every way, Davis was an early winner of the prestigious Justice Byron (Whizzer) White award, given by NFL Players Assn., in recognition of civic contributions.

Born in Lisbon, La., July 24, 1934, Willie was one of three children whose mother, Nodie, didn't want him to play football because, as Willie explained, "she was afraid I'd get hurt." At any rate, Willie went ahead and played high school football and won a scholarship to Grambling.

Davis was drafted by the Browns in 1956 but then played football two years in military service. After his second season as an offensive lineman in Cleveland Davis was traded to Green Bay in 1960.

Lombardi shifted him to defensive end and Willie began a virtually-new career. While playing football, Davis earned his master's degree in business at the University of Chicago and today he has attained a lofty business world status, topped by his Los Angeles distributorship for Schlitz Brewing Co.

Ringo, who was an all-pro long before the Packers began dominating the NFL, played with the Packers from 1953 through 1963 and then with the Philadelphia Eagles from 1964 through 1967. All-league seven of his 11 years in Green Bay, he was named the top NFL center of the 1960s. During his combined Packers-Eagles tenure, he played in 10 Pro Bowl contests and was one of the few players ever to start for both the East and the West squads in the post-season classic.

Ringo, the Pack's seventh round draft choice out of Syracuse in 1953, was one of the last of a vanishing breed in the NFL, a lineman who didn't have the dimensions of a "jolly green giant." He reported to the Packers 1953 training camp at 211 pounds and never weighed more than 235 pounds at any time during his career. Yet he responded to the constant challenge of facing a much bigger opponent by utilizing his quickness and native gridiron intelligence and by learning all he could from coaches and teammates alike.

Of Hungarian descent, Ringo was born Nov. 21, 1932, in Orange, N.J. He played his high school football in Phillipsburg, N.J., where his line coach, Wiz Rinehart, suggested a position move that Jim credits as the key factor in his successful football career. Jim switched from fullback to center.

Ringo had doubts he would ever play another football game after a 61-5 Alabama rout of Syracuse in his final college game, the 1953 Orange Bowl. But once the Packers drafted him, he quickly signed a $5,250 contract.

After two weeks in the Packers camp, however, Jim went home to Easton.

"I saw all the bigger players competing for the center job and I didn't see how I could make the team," he explains. "Also I didn't like the length of practices or the ridiculous rules the coach established."

However, back in Easton, Jim was not welcomed with open arms by either his wife or his father. Both felt he should not give up without trying.

"Besides," his father said, "where else are you going to earn $5,250 for four months' work?"

So Jim went back and soon was the Packers' regular center, a position he held until he was traded 11 seasons later.

How Packers Were Built

Despite the addition of 10 free agents last year, the Packers are still a home-grown and young team.

Coach Bart Starr, who decided in his first year (1975) to build the Packers through the draft, added six draftees in 1980 and now has a total of 31 Packers draft choices going into the 1981 season. Twenty-nine of them were chosen by Starr and his staff.

The big crop of free agents (10) last season resulted from a high injury total, especially at linebacker, plus an impressive free agent list.

Of the 31 Packer-picked draftees, 18 are offensive players. Three of the six draft choices in 1980 were offensive linemen.

Here, at a glance, is how the Packers were built and, don't forget, these athletes will be challenged by the 1981 gang of draft picks and free agents:

Lynn Dickey, shown here setting up to pass vs. Bengals in Green Bay, is looking forward to continuing his comeback in 1981.

LYNN DICKEY STUCK ON FOOTBALL

"I look at first, his love for the game. The guy just keeps coming back. He just don't give up. You can't help but have respect for the guy.

"I really envy the guy. He's got a lot of heart. That's facts."

Eddie Lee Ivery, May 21, 1981

By Tom Wheatley
Green Bay Press-Gazette

It hurts to be in love with pro football.

And Green Bay Packer quarterback Lynn Dickey is the textbook example of a battered player.

The hurt, of course, can be physical. Dickey, who will be 32 in October, has spent three of his previous 10 pro seasons mending on the sidelines. Although his high school in Kansas named its football field after him, the local hospital might have been a better choice.

Dickey made it through 1980 without a career-threatening crackup on the field, like the hip injury he suffered in 1972, or the shoulder surgery in 1976, or his shattered leg in 1977.

But last season also showed how football can cause internal injuries.

After Green Bay's third game, a 51-21 loss to Los Angeles, Dickey suffered what seemed to be an emotional crackup.

He had thrown three interceptions, one of them a 99-yard scoring return by Los Angeles rookie Johnnie Johnson. Afterward, Dickey questioned his ability to lead the Packers.

Reacting to Dickey's comment, Packer Coach Bart Starr questioned Dickey's professionalism.

But football, like love, is fickle.

Dickey regrouped after the Los Angeles game to have by far his most productive season.

The Packers, then 1-2 and floundering offensively, came up with a new game plan for Dickey.

Dickey came up with a new outlook. And the Packers came up with some big yardage totals in their last 13 games.

They continued at a win one, lose two pace with their new ball-control passing game. But the problems that led to the team's 4-8-1 over that stretch were not Dickey-related, as he suggested after the Ram game. He had vindicated himself. Not that his teammates felt that was necessary.

While the fans, press and even the Packer coaching staff wondered if Dickey had finally run up the white flag after the Ram game, the Packer players knew better.

"I can't remember anybody trying to badmouth the guy and say, 'Lynn Dickey's not the man,'" recalled running back Eddie Lee Ivery. "He couldn't get the team rolling offensively, and the guy takes it upon himself to take the entire blame. That's just the kind of guy he is.

"You can't help but admire him. I feel every guy on the team has admiration for the guy, 'cause he just keeps pushin' it. It's just a great lesson for young guys like myself."

"I think everyone respects him, I do," said linebacker John Anderson. "He definitely has a lot of guts to come back."

Did Dickey's comments after the Ram game lower his stature in the team's eyes? "It didn't in mine," snapped Anderson.

"It's so obvious that the man's got a lot of determination, got a lot of will," said safety Johnnie Gray. "He's a very self-disciplined person, a strong leader. He knows what he wants to get done on the field. And I think he's proven it last year by the way he played. To me, he's a superstar."

Dickey downplays his role as an inspirational leader. "I haven't really thought about it," he said. As for coming back from injuries, "I had more practice," he said.

His sense of humor has kept him going through his tortured career. After separating his shoulder against the Bears in November 1976, an injury which required surgery and ended his season, he said: "It was another day at the office."

But he does take his injuries seriously. They have stoked, rather than sapped, his love for the game.

"Fortunately one way, unfortunately in another, I was pushed to the limit," said Dickey of his severe injuries. "I either had to respond, or just cash it in, give it up.

"The problem with a lot of football teams is, the players don't know what they have to put out to make a winning season a reality. They slap each other around and yell rah-rah. And they're talking about putting in the sweat, putting in the time. But a lot of people, they've never been pushed beyond that point. So when they get there, they stop. They fall short.

"We're that kind of football team. There are a couple of guys who come under that heading. I know. I can remember being there myself."

How did he crash through that barrier?

"Well, I guess I've been nearer to retirement than I care to think about," said Dickey. "And a little click goes off in your mind: 'Hey, it's over.' You get a quick flash of those.

"And I just said. 'If I'm gonna go down, I'm gonna give it all I've got.'"

That's what made the Ram game so frustrating. Here he was, reasonably healthy at last, leading the Packers into reverse and at high speed.

Dickey can laugh now about his postgame comments.

As Dickey said after his comments first hit the papers, he wasn't misquoted. But he was misunderstood.

"I'd been making a mistake in my play up to that point, and wasn't playing well," said Dickey. "I had been distrusting what everybody else was gonna do and really not taking care of my own job. I was worrying about other people making mistakes, and I was the one making the majority of them."

But he couldn't fill that foreman role. The result was his postgame quote in Anaheim that "I don't know if I can help this team."

"I felt like I can't take this team to a winning position. I can't do it by myself. If somebody can do that maybe," explained Dickey. "But I'm not that guy for this team. And immediately, everybody came out and said, 'Boy, has he lost confidence in himself. Will he be able to play at all?' I had buddies of mine I know real well and goof around with in Kansas City (where he now lives) call me. And it came across to them the same way, that I just rock-bottom lost confidence in myself and that I was ready to give the game up.

"But I never lost confidence in myself."

Dickey didn't retreat after the Ram game. He just attacked in a different direction. "After the game, I kind of said. 'The hell with everybody else. I'm just gonna take care of my job, and just take it for granted that everyone else is gonna take care of his job.' I just put blinders on.

"Zeke (quarterback coach Zeke Bratkowski) has mentioned to all the quarterbacks at times, 'Be selfish.' And that's the way I approached the game. Surprisingly, I played better, and the team responded better."

Both Dickey and the team responded well to the quick rhythm passing game put in after the Ram debacle. It stressed short passes. The theory, said Dickey, "is just keep moving the chains, and pretty soon the goal line's gonna hit you in the face."

The strategy fit in with Dickey's new selfish philosophy. Before, he felt obligated to force the ball downfield to a primary receiver, even if he were well-covered.

"But if you've got a back standing at the line of scrimmage there's a completion. Give him the football and let him shake and bake and see what he can do. And all of a sudden, he gets away and he's got an 8-yard gain for you.

"If you figure how hard you gotta work for a 5-yard run consistently, you've gotta take that. You can't live and die with it. You've got to throw deep and throw the little longer rhythm passes just to keep the defense honest. But you can plan a large portion of your passing game in a quick rhythm system."

Dickey said he always liked the quick rhythm game, but refused to take credit for selling it to Starr, Bratkowski and receiver coach Lew Carpenter. "If I had solely come up with the idea, I'd say so," he laughed. "But it didn't happen like that."

Packer fans can expect that offense again this year.

"You can't really can something that worked for you," said Dickey, who also likes the way it reduces wear and tear on quarterbacks. "It cuts down on the opportunity to getting sacked," he said. "The linemen can hit, and hit, and usually the ball's gone, rather than having to sustain a defensive lineman for four seconds."

He may have avoided major injury, but Dickey still managed his share of physical hurts. He racked up a leg twice, first in the exhibition opener and then again late in the season.

In between, he developed tendinitis in his throwing arm. For a six-week stretch, the pain kept him from throwing for three days after a game. Right after the game, in fact, his shoulder was so sore he could barely put his sports coat on.

So why does he keep torturing himself?

Money probably is one reason. His contract is believed to be for nearly $200,000 this year. He has the freedom now to spend his off-seasons now doing what he likes best, working out, playing golf and tending his investments.

In four or five years, if his investments pan out, he probably would be financially free for life, Dickey said.

But the money isn't worth the risk of not walking again, a possibility after his hip injury in '72.

"The money's fine, but it comes and goes," said Dickey.

"Look, I'm not fast. I never claimed to be. But I feel I've got enough quickness to play my position and play it well, and to get out of trouble and make something happen. If it got to the sitting-duck stage, yeah, I'd think about hanging it up. I've seen guys at that stage in their careers when I think, 'Wow, it's fun. But it ain't that much fun.'

"I enjoy the game, the physical part and the mental preparation. The things that have happened to me are bad breaks. They happen. Some people never get a scratch. I've just been in the wrong place at the right time.

"But I want to be able to say in 10 years, when I'm approaching 42, 'When I was able to play, physically, I played as long as I could. And now that I'm done, I don't miss it a bit.'

"I don't want to say, 'Boy, I could have played another three or four years, if only I had given it the effort.'"

Dickey's wife, Sherry, isn't crazy about seeing him hauled off the field on a stretcher at least annually, he admitted. "Obviously, it upsets her," he said. "But I think I'd have everyone nuts around my house (he has three daughters) if I quit the game and still had a lot of it in me. Once I rehab and get back on my feet again, she's all for anything that I want to do."

And there isn't anything else he'd rather do. "I don't want to get a job in the offseason just to say, 'Hey, I got a job.'" said Dickey, a phys ed major at Kansas State.

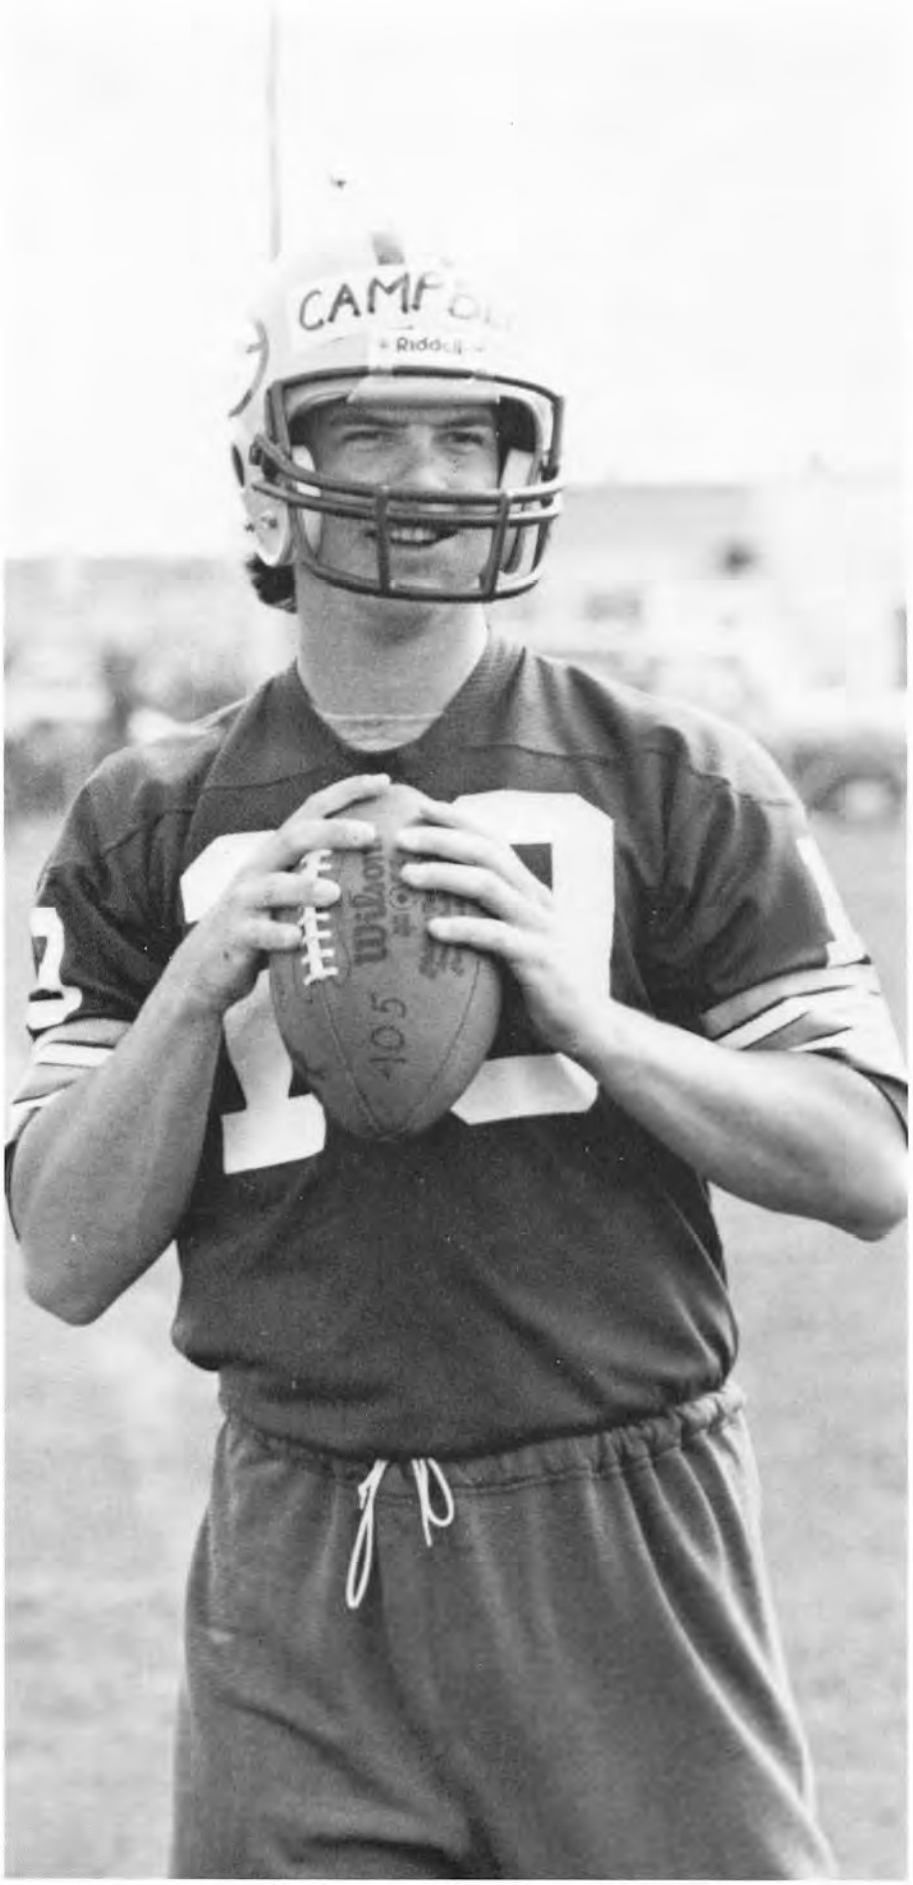
His life is football. The game is in his blood, "which is all over the field," he said, grinning.

His goal is a Super Bowl ring. "It doesn't hurt to dream," he said. "If it doesn't happen, I'm not gonna roll over and die. You gotta shoot for something.

"Everybody's got the loves of their lives, what they enjoy doing."

And Lynn Dickey, for better or for worse, is stuck on football.

Mark Miller, left, obtained in a trade with the Browns, and Mike Mancuso, former Cowboy, are in running for a Packer quarterback relief job behind Lynn Dickey.



Rich Campbell tests arm at Packers' mini-camp.

CAMPBELL A PURE PASSER

Rich Campbell, a Packer rarity in a historical sense, is happy about being a Packer.

The Packers' rookie is only the eighth quarterback chosen as a first choice by Green Bay in 45 years of the NFL college player draft.

The previous quarterbacks chosen in the first round never made a big mark in Green Bay as a QB. Only one was a spectacular, but not at quarterback. That would be Paul Hornung, who played his first year at QB, and then was switched to running back.

The others were Ernie Case, Stan Heath, Babe Parilli, Randy Duncan, Don Horn and Jerry Tagge. Case and Duncan never played in Green Bay, Heath made it for one year, Horn and Tagge four years and Parilli five.

Being a No. 1 draft choice in this particular period of pro football carries with it a might more pressure than it did 15 or 20 years ago.

When Campbell reported for the Pack's mini-camp in May, Backfield Coach Zeke Bratkowski touched on one of the young QB's problems: "Everything is difficult for him right now because there's so much media pressure. Everybody wants to talk to him. That's going to be an adjustment he's going to have to make the first two or three days. And then he'll be able to relax and concentrate."

Gary Lewis

Richard Turner

Coach Bart Starr and Bratkowski both said they intend to bring Campbell along slowly and watch his development carefully. He'll be in competition with David Whitehurst, Mark Miller, Mike Mancuso and Nickie Hall for one of the two backup spots behind number one quarterback Lynn Dickey.

At 6-4 and 224 pounds, Campbell is the ideal size for a quarterback in the pros. And he has an advantage over other rookie QB prospects.

His school used a pro-style offense—plus most of the teams he played against used pro-type coverages. He responded with a 70.7 completion percentage in 1980 and 64.5 for three seasons. Both percentages are NCAA records.

Campbell is considered a "pure" passer in that he has exceptional accuracy, touch and timing. He has a great deal of patience and rarely "forces" the ball to a receiver.

Roger Theder, Campbell's coach at California, thinks he may be a hit sooner than many people think. "I think Rich will be a great quarterback coming in," Theder said, adding: "There is not that much about pro coverages that Rich will not already have seen, and his preference was Green Bay."

Campbell was really excited about being picked by the Packers, as evidenced by his off the cuff remarks right after being drafted. Later, Rich said "It's true. My comments about coming to Green Bay were spoken from the heart."

A hunter and fisherman, Campbell said "in the Bay (San Francisco) area you have to drive two hours to do something like that. Now in Green Bay I can do that in half an hour. I like that type of atmosphere, this type of town."

This was the second year in a row the Pack didn't draft a running back, but they did select a second quarterback, the aforementioned Hall, who was chosen on the 10th round.

Hall never played much until he was a senior at Tulane and then threw 21 touchdown passes. He has considerable raw tallent and his arm has been called "a real whip" by Dick Corrick, director of player personnel.

Here are the Packers' 1981 draft choices and the figures in parentheses designate the order of selection of the

Bart Starr's 25 Years in Green Bay

Bart Starr was assigned No. 42 when he first reported to Packers in July, 1956.

By Lee Remmel, Green Bay Packer Director of Public Relations

"I have a vivid memory of the first number Equipment Manager Dad Braisher gave me when I arrived in Green Bay. It didn't make me feel very confident because it was 42. I thought to myself, 'There's no way they think I'm going to be around very long, with a number like that.'"

The memory drew a throaty and heartfelt chuckle from Bart Starr, fondly reflecting upon that early day from the panoramic perspective of 25 years' association with Green Bay and the Packers.

The number in question, long since changed and all but forgotten, hardly had been a barometer of things to come. Not only did the youthful southerner survive, he went to play for 16 seasons—longer, it turned out, than any other Packer in the team's 62-year existence. The rest of the story is familiar. In the ensuing process, he matured into the most productive quarterback in the history of professional football, escorting Green Bay to five National Football League titles in a memorable seven-year span.

And now, after a two-year sabbatical as a fan, combined with weekend employment as a CBS-TV football analyst, he finds himself in his seventh year as head coach of the game's most intriguing franchise.

As a perennial and practicing exponent of the positive approach—even the effervescent Ronald Reagan pales by comparison—Bart Starr is not one to live in the past. A doer and a builder by nature, he is too engrossed in maximizing the present and planning for the future to spend much time on "history."

While zeroing in on the 1981 season, however, the storied ex-field general did permit himself to look back over those 25 years of green and gold, and what they have wrought—in the Packers, in the game, and in his life.

When the clean-cut and courtly son of Alabama first arrived in Green Bay, Dwight David Eisenhower was nearing the end of his first term as President and the Packers were on the verge of their final season in compact and venerable City Stadium, situationed on the banks of East River, where it had been the mecca for Wisconsin's pro football buffs since 1925.

Bart may never forget that maiden visit. "I was here around the first of July in 1956 for the first time," he says. "I was very nervous, but very excited and was, obviously, quite surprised because we got one of those blasts of cool air that you can get here that time of year.

"I had never been this far north at that time of year, and quite frankly, wasn't prepared for it. And, even though we were only walking between the Northland Hotel and the YMCA, where we were eating our meals, I almost froze to death a couple of mornings at breakfast. That memory lingers with me yet today."

His frigid introduction to the home of the Packers was not the only surprise the young quarterback was to get. "I was extremely shocked at the size—or the lack of size—of the dressing room," he says. "We were, in those days, playing at City Stadium, which was behind East High School. When we walked into the dressing room for the first time, I couldn't believe how small it was."

Although Bart found his first training camp "very, very exciting," he notes, "I was already lonely at that time because I had been gone from home for a couple weeks. I was also concerned. We had a couple of very strong-armed quarterbacks who I could see were quality players. In those days, the word was out that they only kept two quarterbacks, and I knew they had a very experienced, excellent leader in Tobin Rote. So I didn't know what to expect, except to give it my best shot. As concerned and as excited as I was, I was also extremely confident because I had worked extremely hard coming into that first training camp.

"I had spent the entire summer getting ready and I really believe that enabled me to get off to a flying start because the other quarterbacks here at the time were stronger physically, and perhaps even better passers. However they hadn't worked as hard as I had and, as a result, I stayed and they didn't.

One moment which is still green in Starr's memory occurred in early August that '56 season. The occasion of his first full-dress outing in a Green Bay uniform. "It was in an intra-squad game in Janesville," he said. "We played two intra-squad games in that year—one in Janesville and one in Neenah-Menasha. I was fortunate enough to play well in both of them and, again, I think those performances enabled me to stay and make the team. Each time you performed well, of course, it was just a reinforcing of your position.

"I threw a pass for a potential score to Billy Howton, a great wide receiver, and he dropped it in the end zone. He came back to the huddle and said, 'Rook'—he didn't even call me by name—'that was a hell of a fine throw, and I'll never drop another one for you.' And he didn't."

As might have been expected, Bart is quick to admit the late Vince Lombardi had a profound influence upon him. But, somewhat surprisingly, he gives the bulk of the credit for his development as a quarterback to another.

"I learned a lot from a number of people," he concedes, "but I think it has to go all the way back to just prior to my senior year in high school, when I spent an extensive period of time at the University of Kentucky under Babe Parilli. He taught me as much about the fundamentals of the position as anyone ever has. He was the only real quarterback who had ever worked with me. Other coaches had spent time with me, but they had never played the position, so he was directly responsible for my fundamental growth in that particular position.

"When I came here, naturally I had the opportunity of observing the people who had played the game for a number of years. I think the greatest attribute I developed in observing Tobin Rote was courage. I've never seen a more courageous individual. He didn't enjoy the protection at that time that many quarterbacks did—he took a real beating from time to time—but I never heard him whimper. To the contrary, he was an outgoing, demonstrative, excellent leader, who almost welcomed the challenge of the shots that he would take. He was as courageous a player as I've ever been around."

The indestructible Rote also figured in one of Starr's most indelible off-the-field memories. "Mr. Quarterback" had gone into service early in 1957, following his rookie season, but shortly had been released because of a chronic back condition before the '57 season started.

"I got back here and was playing golf with Tobin two days before training camp opened," Bart remembers. "We were playing at the Town and Country Golf Course and someone from the Packer office drove up out there to tell Tobin he had been traded to the Lions. I've never seen a guy so upset, and I couldn't blame him, because that's a heck of away to find out. He was so mad that he actually drove his tee shot over the green on the short par 4 first hole."

It might be assumed Rote's departure provided Starr with smooth sailing professionally, but such was not the case. "Babe Parilli had been brought back here that same '57 season in a trade with Cleveland," Bart points out, "and I found myself in a very awkward situation, because he had been my idol in high school. I had worked with him—he trained me—and here I was competing with him. It was an uneasy situation for two years. We became involved in a musical chairs arrangement whereby one would be benched if he were not performing well. I think each of us suffered some loss of confidence as a result and the ultimate loser was the team."

Two years later, Lombardi arrived upon the Green Bay scene and the course of Packer history was about to change dramatically. So, it turned out, was the football life of one Bart Starr.

I think there are two things I learned from Coach Lombardi that stand out quickly," Bart says. "One was organization. It was so much better organized than in 1958. I was three feet off the ground following our initial meeting with Coach Lombardi.

"The second most important lesson I learned from him—one that stood up all the years that he was here—was a true commitment to excellence—giving the very best you have. I've never been able to understand how someone can give less than his best effort.

"The reason I welcomed this approach and his feelings toward it is that my dad has always preached the same thing. I don't know if some of Coach Lombardi's emphasis was due to his exposure to Earl Blaik at West Point or not, but I know my dad's military experience seemed to parallel that of some leaders Lombardi admired most. My dad preached one theme throughout our lives as we were growing up as youngsters—total commitment. And here came Coach Lombardi—it was like hearing my father all over again. It was really great to hear.

Bart matter-of-factly describes his relationship with Lombardi as "businesslike."

"It was a good coach-player relationship," he said. "I never attempted to get very close to him, and I was never encouraged to do so. A couple of players were able to get very close over the years—Paul (Hornung) and Max (McGee). Their personalities were such and the positions they played such that I don't think he even objected to it. He almost welcomed it. He was always able to remain aloof when necessary, but I think he welcomed the opportunity to be a little closer to some players than others.

"Ours was strictly a relationship along business lines. It was always a very comfortable one, never stilted or uneasy. It was warm, but very businesslike during the first two or three years. But, with each passing year, our meetings were more like father-son gatherings."

There seems little question Lombardi was a truly great coach, it was interposed. But why, specifically, was he?

"He was extremely demanding, because he demanded a great deal of himself. He was an outstanding teacher. I think his teaching experience in high school enabled him to present subject matter clearly and concisely in the classroom. I've always felt, too, that though a coach may excel in one area or the other, he should teach well in the classroom and on the practice field. I've been around coaches who were outstanding in the classroom and terrible on the field, or superb on the field and poor in the classroom. Your truly professional coaches have to be good in both areas, in order to qualify as great teachers. Our present staff is composed of coaches who take pride in their ability to teach. They reflect our emphasis on securing good people who can teach.

"Coach Lombardi was extremely knowledgeable—he knew the game very well. We were—I think—ahead of the league at the time in audibilizing and taking advantage of defenses.

"Defenses in those days were too quick to tip what they were going to do. They showed 'dog' and blitz far too early. They positioned their alignments in such a fashion that you could audibilize and take advantage of them. That rarely happens today. So we were, I think, ahead of the league and we stayed ahead of them for a while. They slowly caught up to that sort of thing, but we really hurt teams with audibles for years.

"Additionally, I thought his timing was outstanding. I don't know that he was ever inappropriate with his comments. There were times we as players thought he was, but, as we analyzed the film, we discovered he was correct in his assessment."

The highly articulate Alabamian has no trouble recalling that state of his emotions when, under Lombardi, the No. 1 assignment at quarterback became a tantalizing possibility for him.

"It started from the very first meeting with Coach Lombardi in the downtown offices," Bart confided. "I was walking on air; I was extremely excited. I could see a change coming even then. It continued through training camp. I was working primarily behind Lamar McHan who had been dealt here by the Cardinals. Joe Francis and Babe Parilli, of course, were the other quarterbacks. As training camp wound down, Parilli went to play in Canada and the three of us remained. McHan became the starting quarterback and led us to a victory in the opener against the Bears.

"Though we started strong, we hit the skids and lost five games in a row in the middle of the season. When we went to New York City to meet the Giants, Lamar was suffering from a sore shoulder and was not able to start. I thought I'd get a chance to play that day; I was excited about the opportunity because I knew what it meant to Coach Lombardi to be playing in New York City, his home town, against the Giants, his old team.

"Lo and behold, when Mac couldn't perform that day, Lombardi called on Joe. I sat on the bench, crushed because I 'knew' I'd play that day. As a result, I was extremely disappointed and very dejected after the ball game. We stayed over night in New York and I went out with Ron Kramer that night," Bart said, adding with a deep chuckle, "and I don't remember coming in.

"A week later, when Lamar couldn't play again, Lombardi gave me a chance to play and the fun began."

In the decade that followed, Number 15 was to preside at the offensive controls in a host of big games, including Super Bowls I and II, in both of which he was chosen the Most Valuable Player. But the latter are not the only ones that stand out in his memory.

"I think that your championship games probably are the ones you always tend to reflect on first," Bart acknowledges, "but there were a couple of others that I vividly remember—for different reasons. There was a final game against San Francisco in 1959, when Lew Carpenter was playing fullback because Jimmy Taylor had burned himself in an accident at home. To show you the versatility of Carpenter, he rushed for over one hundred yards that day, and we literally cut up the 49ers because of our outstanding game plan.

"When you could equate to the design of a game plan, truly understand what that game plan afforded you and how you were able to take advantage of the other team, then that game was memorable. Needless to say, we won going away.

"Another game which I'll never forget was the final game in Los Angeles in 1960. By defeating the Rams that day, we would be in the championship game in only our second year under Lombardi. Gary Knafelc and I were roommates and so excited about that game neither of us slept much the night before. We were up so early the next morning no one was on the streets of Santa Monica. We must have walked up and down the beach for two hours before the pre-game meal, left it early, went to get taped early. We just accelerated everything.

Bart Starr was a spectator in 1973 and 1974.

"By doing so, we missed an announcement at the pre-game meal that the bus departure had been pushed up 15 minutes. Well, we left our room to go what we thought was 15 minutes early to catch the buses, and we're late. Through the glass doors of the lobby, we could see Coach Lombardi standing by the first bus, and we could tell he was upset even from a distance. You could see the steam coming out of his ears. He spotted us through the doors and literally ran to grab us. He popped one door open and blurted some expletives. He said that we were being fined and to get our ass on the bus. I kept telling myself on the trip to the Coliseum, 'Don't let this upset you; don't let it get to you; you've got a game plan to execute.'

"After we arrived, Gary and I were dressing together in the same cubicle. There was hardly a word exchanged, for obvious reason. We went out, won the ball game, played extremely well. After the game, Coach Lombardi came by, stuck his head in the cubicle and said, 'Forget the fine.' He didn't say, 'Nice game, well played,' anything. Just 'forget the fine.' As he walked away, Gary said, 'Thanks a lot, you old sonofabitch.'" Again, Bart "broke up" at the memory, adding, "That has to be one of the most meaningful experiences I've ever had. Gary and I still laugh about it."

There also was a season, Starr will tell you, he will never forget.

"I think the '67 season was meaningful for us, because we were crippled and hurt," he said. "It probably was the greatest example of teamwork on display throughout a year that I've ever been a part of—because we really should not have won that year.

"It's quite possible another team could have won because of our injuries. We were hurt in a number of areas, but found a way to win, and that's what you have to do. In retrospect, it was very satisfying because of the obstacles we overcame, beating Dallas in the "Ice Bowl" and capping the season with a big Super Bowl win was the highlight of a very hard fought year. We were literally drained at the end of that season. It was a very emotional year for us."

Ironically, the then veteran quarterback encountered the greatest disappointment of his playing career the same season.

"I think the injury to my shoulder in 1967, from a personal standpoint, handicapped me from playing well at a time when I felt I was just peaking mentally," he says. "I'm quite confident that, from a physical standpoint, excluding my shoulder, that I could have played for many years after that. I felt good, I had always kept myself in good shape. I had reached a point where mentally I just felt like I could—with the proper supporting cast—go out and eat up another team. That's a great feeling for a quarterback to have.

"But, from '67 on, I couldn't do that because I couldn't throw the ball like I wanted to. I remember the year I tried to come back and play against New Orleans in Milwaukee (1971, his 16th and last season). I had a couple of passes picked off by people who shouldn't have been anywhere near the ball. I knew then that I couldn't perform after that."

Though he ordinarily eschews comparisons, particularly of teams and/or individuals, Starr readily admits football has changed dramatically since he first moved in under center for the Packers a quarter century ago.

"The game is played at a faster pace," he says without equivocation. "The coaching/teaching is better. Everything is more sophisticated due to increased emphasis on situation planning from the use of substitutions to the deployment of those players. I don't know that the top athletes are any better; but they are bigger, stronger and faster. I think they receive better total conditioning advice from an earlier age today, and by the time they reach this level, many are awesome. On the other hand, we have some on rosters who could not have played 20 years ago.

"Reemphasizing an earlier point, preparation time has expanded, for both coaches and players, because the game is so situation-oriented. Everything is geared to situations today. Some teams will hit you with a 'nickel' defense if you have more than seven or eight yards to go on second down. It's incredible to see defenses change and the number of looks that you get; I'm obviously speaking offensively here. From the defensive side, you get the same thing; you see offenses come in with different people, if you get behind in the down and distance game."

The program for Bart Starr Day.

Is it possible, Starr was asked, that pro football's popularity has peaked?

"I believe we have enjoyed some of the greatest popularity the game will know," he replied. "I don't know that we've necessarily peaked, because through sophisticated electronic communications, we display a sport to millions of people all over the world.

"I think that management's greatest challenges in the coming years are to heighten imagination, explore new marketing ideas, and structure soundly with people who are team oriented, unselfish, committed and knowledgeable."

Narrowing the focus, to his own team and the immediate future, Starr sights better days ahead. "I believe we'll have a much better football team this season simply because I believe we're going to be healthy—and more consistent. If we are, we'll have improved performances. We'll continue our building—and I'm speaking not only of the team but our own physical plant and our growth as an organization.

"We have a lot of growth to engage in here in the coming years. If we're going to be competitive within the National Football League, there are numerous changes that must be made.

"I feel this year's team will be the most talented we've had since I've been head coach here because we've been able to draft and acquire more capable players. We're still deficient in a couple of critical areas because we haven't been able to fill in to the degree that we would like. But in time we'll be just fine."

He obviously enjoys coaching, it was suggested. Does he plan to continue indefinitely?

"Yes, I do. And I'd like to continue coaching here for some time. By winning this year, I believe we'll have that opportunity. It would then be a goal of all of us to continue the building of this football team toward a championship; that's what we're all after."

Twenty years . . .

Can it really be 20 years since that day when the first National Football League championship game was played in Green Bay?

And can it be 20 years since I last wore the good old blue and white for Merrill High?

Twenty years since Vince Lombardi's Packers laid claim to supremacy of the football world for the first time?

Twenty years since I helped the Bluejays stumble through a 1-7 season?

Can it really be two decades since the New York Giants—those big-city bad guys from the East Coast—swaggered into town, only to exit a thoroughly thrashed and chagrined team?

Twenty years since this mediocre lineman ingloriously ended his gridiron career by suffering a broken toe during the last practice of his senior year?

It can be, and it is. Two decades have somehow rushed past since this high school senior saw and heard the first chapter of the Packers' Glory Years written. Twenty years have amazingly evaporated since those heady Sunday afternoons of 1961 when Packer success was not yet demanded, but merely savored as a rare delicacy by Packer fans.

Vince Lombardi was not yet a legend, but merely a worthy adversary for the likes of George Halas or Paul Brown. Paul Hornung's image was just beginning to get its golden tint, Bart Starr's star was still on the rise, and even Fuzzy Thurston looked youthful.

It's been 20 years all right. Since then we have reveled through the Sixties and become a jaundiced lot in the Seventies. We saw that fragile thing called success come to Green Bay and stay longer than it had anywhere before in National Football League annals. And before it wafted away, we counted ourselves among football's chosen fans.

The beginning of that era was 1961. More specifically, it was Dec. 31, 1961, when the Packers did a 37-0 number on the aging but still-potent New York Giants.

But let's back up just a bit here. Let's go back to the beginning of our seasons—mine and the Packers'—that year. It didn't take long to set the tone for the fall. The Packers were winning their games Sunday after Sunday; we were losing ours Friday night after Friday night.

I began to use the Packer performances as salve for the wounds suffered two days before. I somehow felt a weekly exposure to their brand of excellence would lift our beleaguered high school team to previously unscaled heights—and maybe even a victory or two. But, apparently, our opponents in Antigo and Schofield and Wisconsin Rapids were watching and listening—and better emulating—the Packers as well.

We would shrug off our Friday night misadventures and by Sunday morning, wait anxiously for the kickoff. We began to sense that the 1960 appearance in the championship game against the Philadelphia Eagles was no fluke, that this team was indeed the genuine article.

Dynasty was not yet part of our vernacular then. The Packers hadn't established theirs yet, and when you play on a 1-7 team, you don't think about dynasties, you simply weigh your chances for survival each week. But as Vince always did, we played 'em one at a time, respectably if not successfully.

No, the success story was 120 miles away in Green Bay. And, finally, after Antigo put the final nail in our coffin of a campaign, I turned my full attention to what was happening with the Packers.

This winning habit the Packers had acquired was still a new experience. Through junior high and early high school, the Packers were something less than a dominant force. But, of course, then Vince Lombardi arrived on the scene and changed all that.

So here it was, late 1961 and it seemed likely that Green Bay would repeat as Western Division champion. Then there was that game with the Giants in Milwaukee, that 20-17 win which clinched the division crown. It took a fourth quarter come-from-behind touchdown and a monumental (189-yard) performance from Jimmy Taylor, but a rematch with those Giants was a reality.

But, this time, it would be for everything, and it would be in Green Bay.

That was a bittersweet thing, the fact that the Packers would play host to this championship showdown. It meant that more than 39,000 fans would be able to see this history-making clash in person. I was happy for them because they had earned that right.

But for me, it meant no television since Wausau fell into the blackout radius at that time.

It only fleetingly crossed my mind to try and get a ticket. An askance look from my dad took care of that. We would, the look said, content ourselves with Ted Moore's resonant radio voice, just as we had for all of Green Bay's City Stadium games that year.

Tickets in our town at that time were for the mayor, a couple of doctors and dentists and perhaps several other upper-crust types, such as tavern owners. They were not for high school kids, or former football coaches who could appreciate Lombardi's brand of football better than nearly anyone else.

While I merely appreciated the Packers' excellence at that time, my father was a bit in awe of it. As a former coach, he was well aware of how rarely the game was played that well, that consistently.

The weather during the week leading up to the game was a prime topic of conversation. While it warmed to 20 degrees (above zero) by gametime on Sunday, the mercury plunged to 10 below for much of the preceding week. The worry was that a frozen field would remove the effectiveness of Hornung and Taylor, or somehow deter Boyd Dowler or Max McGee from running their precise pass routes, or rob Bart Starr of his pinpoint accuracy.

We had at that time, of course, no idea that this 1961 title game would be a balmy affair compared to the legendary Ice Bowl against the Dallas Cowboys six years hence. We just knew it was a nasty week and I could still remember our frigid finale against Antigo nearly two months earlier and couldn't begin to understand how anyone could still be playing in the depths of a Wisconsin winter.

The New York press recognized little Green Bay.

The newspapers carried pictures of practices all week. There was a photo of Hornung, Dowler, Ray and Nitschke—the four part-time soldiers that year—posing with Lombardi, all five of them wearing stocking caps.

There was the sobering news that Alex Webster and Roosevelt Brown were all healed up and ready to go, and that Jesse Whittenton and Bill Quinlan were down with severe colds and looked doubtful.

Finally, it was Sunday and the stage was set. We took our seats at the kitchen table where the radio was at high volume. The first quarter was basically uneventful, as are first quarters of many championship games. But the second quarter, ah, that second quarter:

Hornung for six yards and a touchdown ... Starr to Dowler for 13 yards and a touchdown ... Starr to Ron Kramer for 14 yards and a touchdown ... Hornung, 17-yard field goal with no time left on the clock. Packers 24, Giants 0. Not much time left for the Giants, either.

It was an unbelievable 15 minutes of football. It set 39,000 fans wild in City Stadium, their earflaps (remember them?) flying as they yelled themselves hoarse. And in kitchens and living rooms across Wisconsin, the cheers of fans released from long years of bondage were equally unrestrained.

The Giants really had no zest for combat, it seemed, after that second quarter. Neither Conerly nor Tittle could light a fire under New York's offense as Coach Allie Sherman chafed on the sidelines and club President John Mara silently watched the debacle from his press box seat above.

Another Hornung field goal ... Starr to Kramer for 13 yards and a touchdown ... still another Hornung field goal, giving him a record 19 points and assuring him of the new Corvette awarded by Sport Magazine.

And through it all, a defense that gave New York a mere 130 yards net.

In the end, Lombardi pulled out Hornung and Taylor and Dowler and Starr one by one, allowing each his own ovation.

The newspaper accounts of the game were read and re-read. But the one memory that has never dimmed with time is that famous picture of Lombardi riding off the field on the shoulders of Dan Currie and Dave Hanner, those piano keyboard teeth flashing in a huge grin.

What followed that memorable day, of course, was nearly an entire decade of dominance. What followed, too, was growing up and becoming more sophisticated and more expectant of success.

We had dared hope for a championship that year and we were rewarded with a 37-0 rout.

It was only the beginning, but yet it was, in a sense, the end of our innocence. The championships that followed all had identities of their own, but none matched the wide-eyed appreciation we held of that first one.

Twenty years ... can it really be that long ago?

BEFORE and AFTER

Coach Vince Lombardi was a tough disciplinarian but he did allow such goings-on as above. The boys cut up for their own personal picture and then posed for the picture below for public viewing. This is the 1962 team that went all the way, losing only one game. It ranked as one of the best in Packer history. Can you name the players? Identification is on Page 48.

DICKEY BREAKS SEVEN RECORDS

Lynn Dickey gets the media treatment after victory over Bengals.

Lynn Dickey returned to the wars with a bang in 1980.

Plagued by injuries three of the last four years, Dickey took advantage of a new quick rhythm passing setup—plus the NFL's new rules, and broke seven individual Packer passing records.

It was the biggest single-season change in the passing records since Cecil Isbell went on a binge with Don Hutson in the early 1940s and established most of the original Packer aerial marks. Most of these were toppled by Tobin Rote and Bart Starr but now Dickey has established new marks.

Dickey's fireworks provided for four new team passing records.

It was the passingest year in Packer history. A record 511 passes were thrown to break the mark of 478 set back in 1951. The Bays gained 3,291 yards passing to break the old record of 2,846, also set in 1951. The completion total of 289 broke the record of 240 set in 1979. The passing yards boosted the total yards gained figure to 5,087, which broke the 4,791-yard figure set by the championship 1962 team.

Dickey's passing broke three of Starr's records, two held by Rote and one each by Don Horn and John Hadl. Dickey broke some of them by a wide margin, although it must be remembered he worked a 16-game schedule compared to 12 for Rote and 14 for each of the others. Starr's first five years were in a 12-game schedule.

The Record Book

Here are Dickey's new records:

Most Passes Attempted Season 478 (old record 382 by Rote in 1954).

Most Passes Attempted Game 51 (old record 46 by Starr in 1958).

Most Passes Completed Season 278 (old record 191 by John Hadl in 1975).

Most Passes Completed Game 35 (old record 26 by Starr in 1958).

Most Passes Had Intercepted Season 25 (old record 24 by Rote in 1950).

Most Yards Passing Season 3,529 (old record 2,438 by Starr in 1962).

Most Yards Passing Game 418 (old record 410 by Horn in 1969).

Dickey's three "game" records were set in the five-quarter 14-14 overtime tie at Tampa Bay. Starr's two records set in 1958 were in a losing cause against the then-champion Baltimore Colts.

The passing put two other Packers among the leaders. James Lofton nailed 71 passes in 1980 to just miss Don Hutson's season record of 74 set in 1942. Eddie Lee Ivery caught 11 passes against Tampa Bay to gain a tie for fourth with Bob Mann (1951) and Billy Howton (1954). The record of 14 was set by Hutson vs. the New York Giants in '42.

Two departed players left records. Kicker Chester Marcol set a record 120 field goals in his nine-year career and Dave Beverly kicked a record 496 punts in his six seasons. Marcol finished with 521 points, fourth on the all-time list.

The following records are presented with apologies to all the Packer stars who played before records were kept:

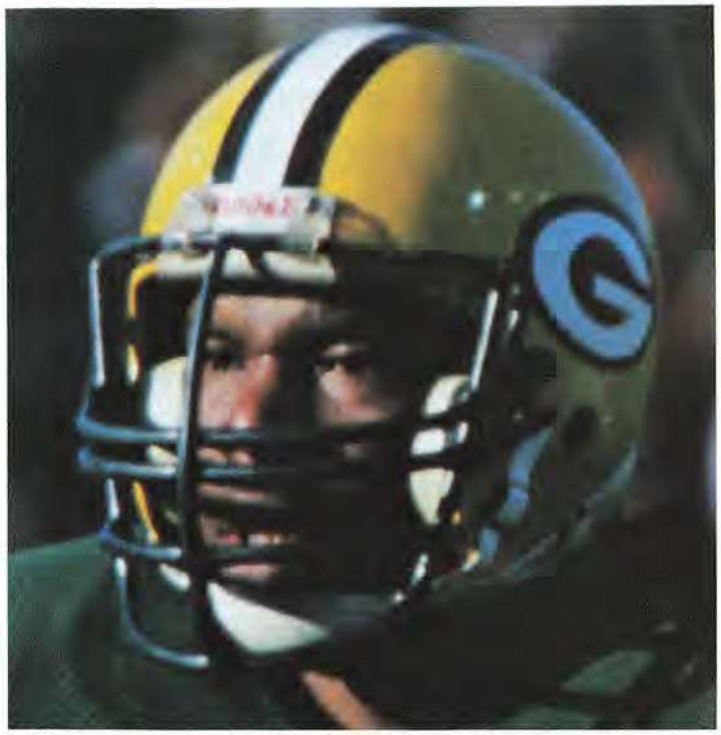
MIKE DOUGLASS:

"When I Get A Check My Mom Gets a Check"



Mike Douglass — waiting for the next play.

By Jill Lieber
Milwaukee Sentinel

Michael Douglass took his first trip to a better life when he was 10. He climbed aboard a Los Angeles city bus at 103rd St., in the ghetto of Watts, one of the largest and most depressing ghettos in the country, and he took a ride across town, away from the sun-baked asphalt and cement, away from the run-down buildings and shabby houses, as far from the crime-ridden streets as he could get.

For 15 cents, he was carried outside the chain link fence that surrounded the ghetto, separating the bad life from the good.

"It was like a dream," said Douglass, who many years later grew up to be a star linebacker for the Packers. "It looked like something from a TV show.

"Whenever I had saved up enough money — and there were times I had to scrape to buy an ice cream cone — I'd get on the bus and watch the cars go by. I'd say, 'I want this car. I want that car. Someday, I'm going to have a life like this.'

"My mother impressed upon me early to get outside and explore 'the other life.' She'd say, 'Go for a ride on the bus. See what's out there.'

"She wanted to create a need — a force within me — to drive me to want a better life. So, I took her advice and I got out and looked."

After the bus rides, his life was never the same.

Douglass grew up fighting the temptations and pressures of the streets in which he lived. And the battle to avoid being caught up in — and carried away by — the violence and sorrow was a never-ending one.

But all the while, in the back of his mind, was the dream, the hope, the want that his mother had planted.

"When I was little, my mother told me she was never going to come down and get me out of jail," Douglass said. "And that's something that stuck with me all the time I was growing up."

Douglass wore the shoes of the man of the house, and while his grade school and teenage friends were carrying guns and experimenting with drugs, he was carrying a load of responsibilities on his back.

He has little recollection of his father, who deserted the family when Douglass was quite young. He and his three brothers and sisters were raised by his mother, Ollie. The family tried to make ends meet with a handful of jobs; Ollie worked almost around the clock as a domestic, and Douglass took on his second job at age 10, working for a janitorial service from 9p.m. until 8a.m.

In between jobs, the two of them took turns guiding the family — Ollie cooked, cleaned and sat her children down with books from the library; Douglass made sure his brothers and sisters went to school and stayed out of trouble.

When there were free moments, like late at night when he was ready to go to his bed, Douglass sat back and looked upon his mother in awe. Mostly, though, he just listened to the sounds of the ghetto and he longed for the life he had seen from the bus windows.

"Lots of times I couldn't understand how my mother kept going," Douglass said. "I couldn't see how she'd go from one job to another — and how she'd cook and clean on top of all that. There were times when she never went to sleep. I'd think, 'How can a person be so driven?'

"But she loved us. Her drive pushed me, too. How could I just sit back and watch her? I couldn't. There were a lot of people around me — especially a lot of my friends' mothers — who sat around and picked up the welfare check.

"My mother grew up in Mississippi. She only made it through the sixth grade because she and her sister had to quit school and go to work. By 14, she was married. Life was hard in those days, and it started early. It's those years of wisdom that she later passed on to me."

That wisdom, undying motivation and deep love for family, grew as Douglass matured into an adult. He was graduated from L.A. Jordan High School in Watts with a 3.6 grade point average (on a 4-point scale).

"I got only two Cs," he said. "In my mind, and in my heart, I had a goal."

And although he hadn't taken up sports until he was in 10th grade, his outstanding performance merited a football scholarship to Arizona State. But after a year there, the responsibilities to his family pulled him home. He moved back to Watts and enrolled in Cal State — Los Angeles.

"I wanted to get back into football, so I spent the next 2½ years trying to get my grades up and get a scholarship," he said. "I suffered; I made a lot of sacrifices. There were days I didn't eat.

"Later on, I moved to Long Beach and rode 2½ hours every day to Hollywood. I studied on the bus.

"There were times I'd call my mother and say, 'I can't do this anymore. I want to quit and get a job. I want to forget about football and come home.'

"She'd say, 'I don't believe you.'"

Douglass earned his associate degree and along with it, a scholarship to San Diego State. In 1978, he was drafted by the Packers in the fifth round. But even at the age of 26 and after three successful seasons in the NFL, don't think Douglass still doesn't dream.

But he doesn't dream of material things. He prides himself on being practical.

"I always wanted a Mercedes," he said, "But I bought myself a house in El Cajun, Calif., instead.

"When you don't have something, you want it. And then, when you can get it, you realize you don't really need it."

And, he doesn't dream of traveling to faraway places. He still goes back to Watts to speak to students at his former high school.

"It's funny," he said. "I don't really fit in there anymore. I don't feel comfortable in Watts. I feel uneasy, paranoid. I see all the danger around me. I see my friends, who are either strung out on drugs or in jail — or dead. And, I wonder how I ever made it out alive."

Nor does he dream of being a superstar. There are those who say at 6 feet, 224 pounds, Douglass is too small to ever be a threatening linebacker in the NFL. Still, in his three seasons with Green Bay, he has been the most prominent and consistent performer on the Packer defense.

"Football is not my whole life," he said. "My family is the most important thing to me. It always has been and always will be. Some guys don't think that way, and when football is out of their lives, they have nothing."

Instead, Douglass dreams the dreams of a child—the dreams of a better life, one filled with love, hope and optimism.

"When I get a check, my mom gets a check," said Douglass, whose mother moved to Oakland a few years ago. "I want my mother's life to be comfortable. Now, it's time for me to help her dream. I call her before I spend money on myself to see if she needs anything.

"Coming through the project, I always thought, 'I'm not going to let my mother suffer.' Quite a few kids say that, but they find a way out, and they leave their parents behind.

"A lot of people in that environment search for the easiest way out—the easiest way to make fast money. But I knew if I put forth the effort—and had a little patience—if I waited, it would come.

"I've been to the point where even though things weren't good, if I had anything to give up, I'd give up half. I was taught to share—no matter what the cost. My mother wouldn't let us kids fuss and holler; she'd tell us to divide it.

"The same things apply to football. I try to help everybody as much as I can. I'm not content to let somebody worry about his own position, I'll help out if he's having trouble.

"Professional football players should be able to relate the game to everyday life. If they can't, then they'll never be winners.

"A lot of guys come into pro ball thinking they are dedicated and disciplined, but you can tell which players had life easy by how they react when things get hard. They don't know how to make sacrifices. They don't know how to reach deeply inside themselves. At no point can they dig down and say, 'I really want it.'

"I've got that drive to sustain. I don't feel there's anything I can't achieve if I set my mind to it."

Nose Tackle Charles Johnson soars in to sack Viking quarterback Tommy Kramer in Packer victory in Green Bay.

A SIGNIFICANT ITEM

With a 5-10-1 finish, the Packers didn't have a whole lot to cheer about in 1980 ... except maybe one significant item.

The team that won the Central Division championship, the Minnesota Vikings, was beaten twice by Green Bay, 16-3 at home and 25-13 at Bloomington. The Vikings finished with a 9-7 record, tied with Detroit, but Minnesota won it on points. The Vikes and Lions split.

The Packers scored their other victories over the Bears, Bengals and 49ers. Ironically, the Bengals downed the world champion Steelers twice while the Pack lost a closely contested 22-20 decision to the Steels.

Green Bay played two overtime games in 1980. The first was in the opener, a 12-6 verdict over the Bears on a touchdown by Kicker Chester Marcol who picked off a blocked field goal attempt and then ran it in.

The other overtime was a full five-quarter 14-all knot with the Buccaneers in Tampa Bay. Green Bay rolled up a record 569 yards but two missed field goals by Tom Birney ruined a victory chance.

The Vikings, who went on to the playoffs and then lost to Super Bowl finalist Philadelphia, was nicked for 773 yards by the Packers in the two games. The total included 393 yards by rushing, with 247 coming in the second game when Eddie Lee Ivery and Gerry Ellis each gained over 100 yards.

The Packers had two extremely low spots during the season. The Rams got the jump on the Pack in Game 3 and roared off to a 51-7 lead before the Packers scored twice in the fourth quarter.

The Bays slammed back from that low to post 4-4-1 in the next nine games before being eliminated from title contention by the Bucs in Milwaukee 20-17. The Packers went into Chicago for Game 14 the next Sunday quite flat and succumbed 61-7 to the eager Bears.

James Lofton relaxes on bench while defense takes over.

Lofton Silences Critics

By Mike Christopulos
Milwaukee Sentinel

A Green Bay newspaper ran a cartoon about James Lofton during the 1979 season. It called him, among other things, a "ham-handed and overpaid receiver."

That unflattering cartoon made a deep impression on the Green Bay Packers' gifted wide receiver.

"It kind of went in line with everything else that was being written about me," Lofton reflected. "Things kind of went sour because people felt I wasn't playing as well as I could have.

"I set out to do some things personally last year and I did those. I had some statistical goals. But even more than that some people had lost faith in my ability to perform at a high level and had questioned how good I really was. I wanted to set all that straight."

Lofton silenced his critics by catching 71 passes for 1,226 yards. That virtuoso performance not only earned Lofton all-pro honors, but put his name into the record book alongside such ex-Packer greats as Don Hutson and Bill Howton.

It all added up to Lofton's most satisfying season as a pro and helped make up for all the trials and tribulations he had to endure in 1979.

Lofton was in hot water almost everytime he turned around in 1979.

First, there was an incident after the team's 27-21 overtime loss to the Minnesota Vikings. Lofton came into the locker room during the postgame prayer, angrily threw his shoulder pads into a locker and had words with Coach Bart Starr.

Then, during the Packers' 27-22 loss to the New York Jets at Lambeau Field, he made an obscene gesture at fans after they booed him for fumbling away a completed pass. Later, during a taped television interview, he used obscenities in discussing what happened.

After that incident, Chuck Lane, who was then the Packers' public relations director, called Lofton, "a prima donna who needs to grow up."

Predictably, Lofton started receiving some "hate" mail in the wake of his troubles. "Over the last eight games of that season I probably got over 500 letters and maybe about 20-25 were negative," said Lofton.

Lofton says now he'd react differently to similar adverse incidents.

"There are always things you can get mad about," said Lofton. "I try to disassociate myself with the pivotal ups and downs. I just go out and play my game. After the game's over, that's the end of it."

"I think a lot of changes happened in his life this past year," said his wife Beverly. "I'm sure you would never see him cuss on television again. He's told me he doesn't get as angry as he used to."

Lofton met his wife at a New Year's Eve party in 1979 and they were married in Hawaii last January while Lofton was there for a Pro Bowl appearance.

Getting married was one of the best things that ever happened to Lofton.

"It helped a lot," said Lofton. "It gave me somebody to depend on, it made my life a little more complete."

His wife, who has a speech pathology degree from Ouachita College in Arkadelphia, Ark., has had a profound influence on Lofton.

When the two met, Beverly thought Lofton was a student at Stanford. He came across as a very quiet, innocent and shy person.

"Finally after we started seeing each other regularly, this egocentric guy came out," Beverly said. "I thought he was a little bit unto himself and I told him that I thought too many people put him up on a pedestal and made him seem like a God. I don't believe in putting people up on pedestals.

"I tore him down sometimes," she continued. "I told him he was no better than anybody else and had a job just like everybody else.

"Basically, he believed that too. But he had to put on this facade in order to defend himself.

"I told him he didn't have to do that to make me happy. He didn't have to be Mr. Big Stuff. He knew he could just be James and I would understand.

"Sometimes, he would hurt my feelings because I'm one of those people who tries to sugar-coat everything. We had to straighten that out. I could tell he was a good person the first time I met him. I knew all he was doing was running people away from him. Success didn't mean he had to be that way."

His wife refuses to take credit for the way Lofton has changed—for the better—in his dealings with other people.

"James started going to chapel and he realized that a lot of things he'd done were not Christian-like" said Beverly.

"He realized there was a better way to go. Just before we were married, he announced he wanted to have a Christian marriage and wanted to put God first, me second and his job and everything else in its place following that."

Even though Lofton has become more serious, there's still a lot of the little boy in him. And he hasn't lost his weird sense of humor.

His wife can vouch for that. They had been shopping for nearly five hours one day earlier this winter in San Jose, Calif.

They happened to be at a Macy's store at the time and Lofton was getting a bit antsy and weary of the shopping ordeal. Suddenly, he plopped himself down on the middle of the floor like a child throwing a tantrum.

"He didn't kick or throw a tantrum," Beverly recalled. "It was more like a fainting spell. But it was terrible because here's this big, 6 foot 3 guy on the floor. It was just his way of getting me out of the store."

Packer receiver coach Lew Carpenter considers Lofton and San Diego's James Jefferson the two finest receivers in the NFL. And Lofton agrees.

"I look at my physical attributes, speed, agility, hands and size," said Lofton. "I'm just as good as any other receiver or better."

Lofton feels he's a much better receiver now than when he first broke into the NFL in 1978.

"It's hard to hang a percentage on how much better I am," said Lofton. "But I know the game a lot better. Physically, I've gotten better. I'm a little bigger and a little faster. For sheer knowledge, I know maybe twice as much now as I did when I first started playing."

Green Bay's wide receiving talent—Aundra Thompson, Fred Nixon, Ron Cassidy and Bobby Kimball—drops off quite a bit after Lofton.

This has worked to Lofton's disadvantage because he invariably faces double coverage.

"I've learned to work around it," said Lofton. "Most of the passes I catch are in the flow of the game and get us first downs. But I think if I was single covered a little more, I'd had more opportunities to score."

Like so many other people Lofton was surprised when the Packers made quarterback Rich Campbell of California their No. 1 draft choice last April.

"Hopefully, it'll help our team sometime," said Lofton. "It's hard to say whether he'll have an immediate impact. I've heard that he's big and strong and a good passer."

Lofton was saluted as the Packers' offensive player of the year at the Wisconsin Pro Football Awards dinner held in Milwaukee last February.

At that affair, Lofton was asked about rumors of a possible trade sending him to the Oakland Raiders for quarterback Dan Pastorini.

"When I heard it, it was too good to be true," said Lofton.

"Basically, I was making that comment in jest," Lofton said. "I'm from the West Coast and I'd like to play there one day. But I'm happy playing with the Packers right now."

And the Packers are happy to have him, considering all the superlative things he did during the 1980 season.

SUPER SNOW BOWL

The Super Bowl will be played in a snow city for the first time in 1982 and the National Football League had better pray that there isn't a mid-winter blizzard in Pontiac, Mich., the weekend of Jan. 24.

No, Super Bowl XVI won't be played outdoors. It will be contested inside the Lions' home site, the Silverdome. But what happens if a huge blizzard keeps people, including the contestants, from reaching the "dome" on the appointed day? Banish the thought!

Seriously, you can bet the NFL is making serious snowplow preparations—just in case the Detroit area doesn't have a third-straight mild winter.

The Super Bowl has been played five times in both Miami and New Orleans. Los Angeles' Coliseum and the Pasadena Rose Bowl hosted two games each. One game was played in Houston.

Other than a sprinkle or two in Miami, weather has never been a factor in the Super Bowl. And it won't be in 1982—at least inside the Silverdome. This will be the third indoor game, the other two being held in New Orleans' Superdome in 1978 and '81.

Packer Schedule Different, Challenging

Ah . . . the schedule.

Every year it's different, bloodier and strewn with pitfalls.

It's the route you take to the Playoffs and then, hopefully, the Super Bowl.

The Packers are supposed to have an easier schedule this season, based on last year's record, but don't tell that to Coach Bart Starr, who explains it this way:

"People who get trapped into that kind of thinking pay the price later."

The Packers meet playoff teams in three of their first four games and then play four of their last five games on the road. Starr feels "it's a little disadvantage to be playing that many games on the road at the end.".

But, as Bart put it, "we get the schedule and we play it. I think it's a great challenge. And I know our people will look at it the same way."

Figured on their 5-10-1 finish of a year ago, the Packers have a different type of schedule this season.

They have 11 different opponents instead of the 12 they had since the 16-game schedule was started in 1978.

This means the Packers have a home-and-home set with an additional team besides the four against Central Division teams. The added two-game sawoff is against New York Giants. Thus, the Packers play 10 games involving the Giants and Division foes Chicago, Detroit, Minnesota and Tampa Bay.

The remaining six games are against Seattle and the New York Jets of the AFC and the four teams in the NFC's Western Divisions, Los Angeles, Atlanta, New Orleans and San Francisco.

The Packers get a good chance to sharpen their claws with a tough pre-season schedule, meeting the Cowboys, Super Bowl champion Raiders, Broncos and Browns in that order.

The Bays open against the Bears for the third straight season, this time in Chicago. The two rivals split the last two openers but the Packers can hardly forget their last visit to Chicago, resulting in a 61-7 walloping Dec. 7. This was quite far removed from the Pack's 12-6 overtime victory over the Bears in Green Bay Sept. 7.
